Institute for Graphics and Imaging to Conduct Color Management Workshop

Pewaukee, Wisconsin—January 2009—The Institute for Graphics and Imaging (IGI)—an education and training organization funded by and dedicated to the printing and graphic arts industry—will hold a color management workshop on February 10 and 11, 2009, at the IGI facility in suburban Milwaukee, Wisconsin. The course is designed for graphic arts specialists who need to move to the next level of color management. Participants will use color measurement devices to create and verify both process and spot color profiles. In addition, they will learn to troubleshoot pressroom issues and profile presses, as well as extract profile information and apply color curve software to determine conformance.

The IGI color management workshop will be conducted by David Hunter, a veteran graphic arts industry color expert. Hunter, who was responsible for the Graphic Arts business segment for Aldus Corporation, is the principal of Pilot Marketing, a graphic arts consultancy specializing in high end color training.

Announcing the color management workshop, IGI Executive Director Ron Dahl commented: “The Institute for Graphics and Imaging is pleased to inaugurate its 2009 training schedule with a hands-on, practical color workshop suitable for everyone printing color.”

Registration information is available at www.igi.org or by calling 262-695-6260.

The Institute for Graphics and Imaging provides education and training in the graphic design, printing, and related industries. Supported by a vast network of industry suppliers, printers, publishers, and governmental agencies, IGI operates on the campus of the Waukesha County Technical College in suburban Milwaukee. IGI facilities, which include computer classrooms and access to the latest printing equipment, are available for sales events and corporate training courses. For additional information go to www.igi.org or call 262-695-6260.
